

The

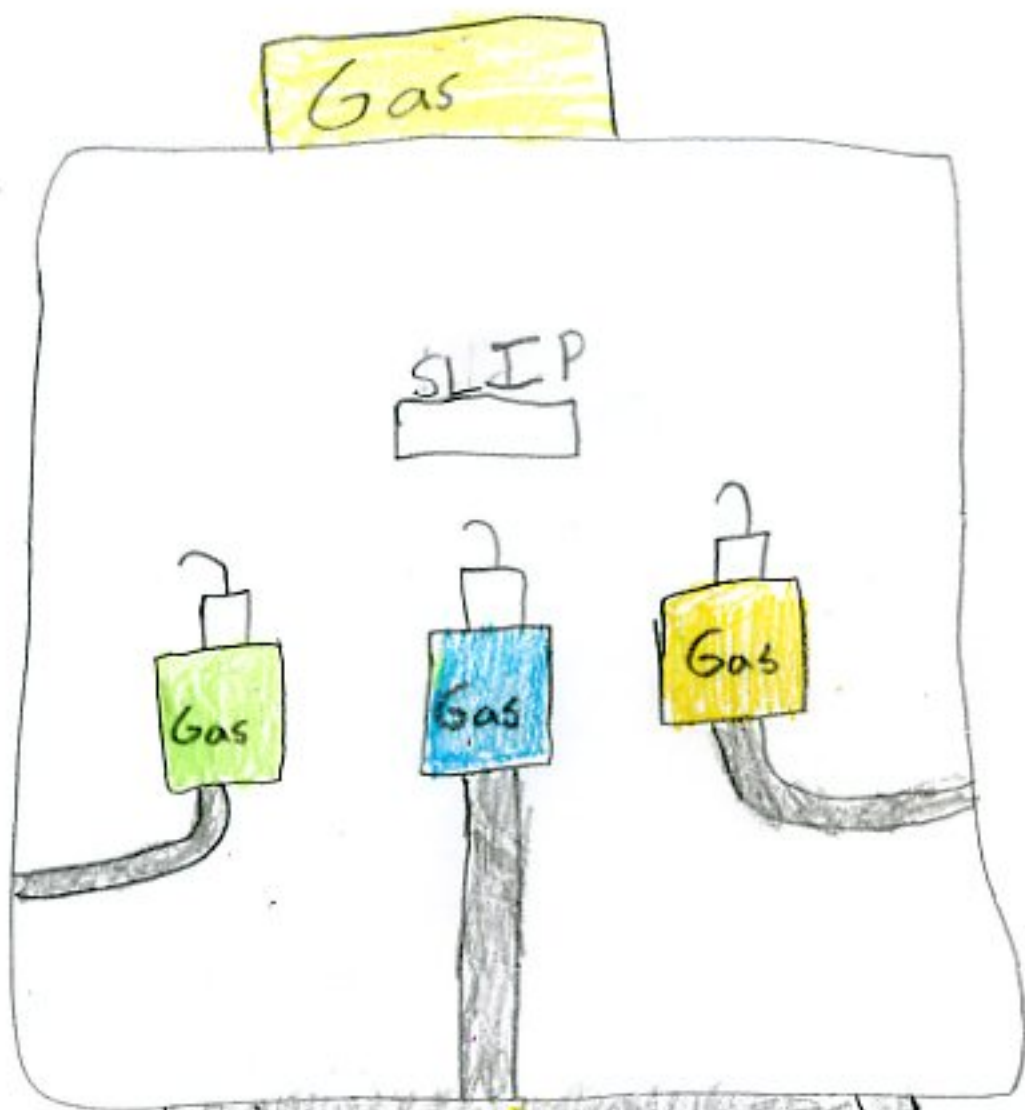

gas

Station

by Heidi Karinen

Once upon a time there was a gas station. Nobody came to the gas station. Cause it was too much money.

They all went to the other gas stations. The people that worked at the gas station were poor so they lowered the price and the other gas stations wanted to be rich so they highered their prices.

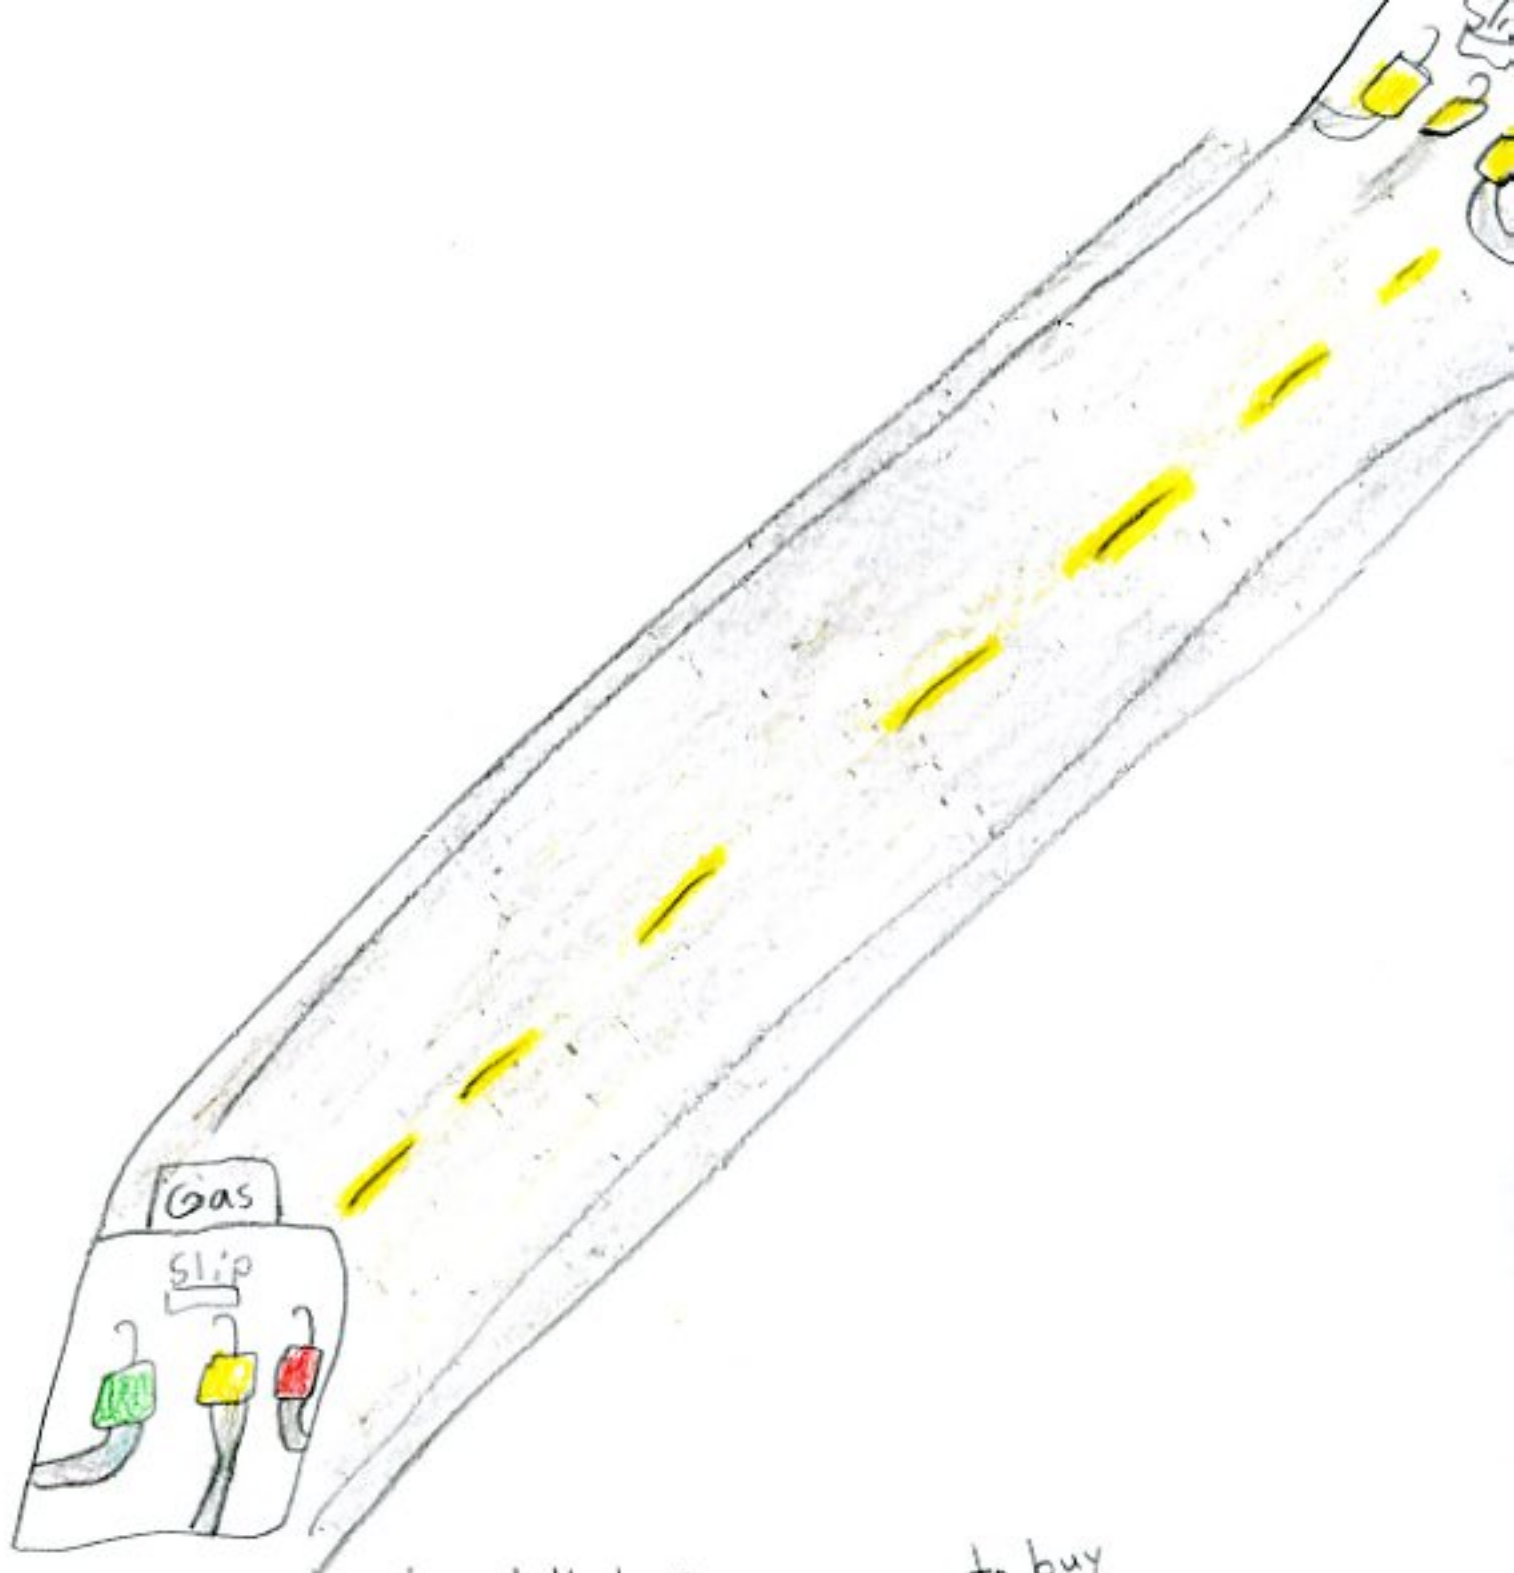

Everybody came to the other gas station. The people that their prices got poor and highered food so they lowered their prices and people came to both gas stations.

They were not poor anymore.

The people were not rich yet but they could buy food now.
The next day people came to the gas stations.

The people still had money to buy food but they were not rich. They were not poor either. The next day people did not need gas. Nobody came to the gas stations that day. The next day ten people came to the gas stations.