Q&A with Filmmakers Ken Burns and Lynn Novick About

THE VIETNAM WAR

By Heidi Zimmerman, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund (VVMF)

Q: Why was it important for you to tell the story of Vietnam?

Ken: I think the Vietnam War is arguably the most important event of the second half of the 20th century. It's a defining moment.

Lynn: It's an extraordinarily important period in history and it is very much unresolved. It is extremely painful and divisive in our culture and it is very poorly understood. We felt it was important to take a look at the story of the war, what happened and why. And perhaps most important – why is it such a difficult subject for us to talk about as a country? Mission one for us was to honor the service and sacrifice of the people who served and died. Give them their due respect as part of the larger story of what our country went through and also what this experience meant for the Vietnamese people.

Q: How do you tell the story of the most divisive period within our nation during the 20th century?

Ken: I think you want to tell a complete story so we've taken 10 episodes and 18 hours to do it. We've worked on this story for 10 years. The film represents 45 years of scholarship that adds on to the experiences of the service members. Obviously, war is human beings at its worst but it also paradoxically brings out the best and we've not neglected to point out those positive aspects, those heroic aspects, at the same time we delve into a war that many Americans would rather ignore.

Lynn: We set out to take a fresh look at this very complicated and divisive story through the eyes of the people who lived through it and to hear from as many different people with as many different experiences and perspectives that we could practically embrace. We interviewed close to 100 people. One of the tragedies of the Vietnam War is that America got involved in a conflict in a country far away that we didn't really understand. We didn't understand our allies or our enemies. We as filmmakers did not want to make that same mistake. I spent a lot of time in Vietnam getting to know people who lived through the war there and hearing from civilians and soldiers. And also speaking to Vietnamese-Americans who fled Vietnam after the war. What we found was that the war is as complicated and unresolved and as difficult to talk about for them on all sides as it is for us.

Q: How do you think the Vietnam era changed our country?

Ken: I think it really split it down the middle and in some ways the divisions that we experience today had their seeds in the Vietnam War. Of course the Civil War ripped huge divisions that are still with us too but I think Vietnam began to have people become cemented in their place and blinded by their particular ideology. I think it's important to try to step back and see the larger picture. I think Vietnam is a hugely important, watershed moment in American history.

Lynn: I think it's impossible to look at our country today and not trace back many of the things that concern us back to the Vietnam era. It really split the country down the middle and we've never moved on from that. It ties into how the soldiers felt disrespected and this question of blaming the warrior for the war. That I really think is the one lesson we learned as a country and that we'll never make that mistake again.
